CHOLERA IS PREVENTABLE

Outbreaks of Cholera have been reported in different parts of the country and yet the disease can easily be prevented by observing simple hygiene. Cholera is a deadly diarrhea causing disease. It causes sudden and serious passing of watery stool and vomiting. This leads to rapid loss of water from the body, weakness and death. Sometimes, this happens within three to four hours if the sick person is not treated promptly.

Cholera is caused by germs, transmitted from someone infected by the disease, through drinking water containing the stool or vomits of the sick person and later touches food, water or cooking and eating utensils such as plates without washing their hands.

Other sources of Cholera infection are raw or poorly cooked fish and other sea foods, raw fruits and vegetables as well as other foods that have been contaminated by cholera germs during preparation or storage. In the city, cholera spreads very fast because of poor drainage especially in slums.
